President's Message

by Andy Gulermovich

Many a member thinks that YACO is a fantastic organization. By your attendance at our functions it is obvious that you think we are a worthwhile organization. Your overwhelming support has been nothing short of superb. But, just who is YACO? It is certainly not me, the Executive Board, or any other single member. By legal definition, YACO is a nonprofit membership corporation, chartered and licensed by the Secretary of the United State of California. We operate under a state approved set of By-Laws which each officer and member is bound by. My authority and that of the other officers is as set forth in our By-Laws. In other words our powers are what you the membership say that they are.

YACO, INC., belongs to you, not to me or any other officer. What I am leading up to is that I notice a certain amount of reluctance on the part of the membership to participate in discussion at our business meetings. I realize that some of this reluctance can be attributed to our newness and a perception by some that YACO belongs to the officers This is simply not the case. YACO belongs to all of us and we each have I vote. Your officers are charged with conducting the day-to-day business of the club but we must account to you, the membership, as is required by state corporate law.

As time goes by and our status sokidifies, I would like to see more participation by the members on items under discussion at our business meetings. As a membership corporation, it is vital for the leadership of the club to know what the members are thinking. We have (cont'd next page)

The mortality of social clubs is exceedingly high. We can perpetuate YACO by increasing our participation in its affairs. Well, January's meeting was absolutely fantastic!! Hats off to the PETER BISKUPS for a very delightful program. It helped to keep fresh in our minds the recent trip that some of us took and for those that have not been there for some time, I'm sure that the pictures brought back a lot of fond memories. Many orchids and accolades to the BIS-KUPS... Our members really turn out for pictures of the homeland, maybe others that have slides or movies will step forward now, let's hope so... Last meeting also saw new membership, now we can all put a face to the deep, resonant, accented, easy to listen to voice of JACQUES ALICAJIC, you know, the PORSCHE AUDI man from the Yugoslav Radio Hour, Welcome JACQUES, MARY ANN and daughter BRIGITTE (9 mos.)... Also welcome to GRACE TAYLOR and to the BUD BAKICH family... Translated from the December issue of Kalifornski, this article was originally published in the DUBROVACKI VJESNIK (Oct. 3, '80 issue)

John Basor from Dunave was an eighth grader when his family, at his uncle's invitation, moved to Watsonville in 1963. In that town, with the surrounding area, close to the ocean and with the climate similar to ours, live a population of 3,500 with a fair number of people from the Dubrovnik area, predominately from Konalve. They began migrating over a hundred years ago. But after the transition was established by the pioneers, others followed. Most of the men of our nationality are still occupied with farming and many city officials were and are among them.

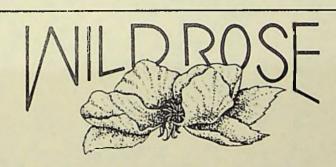

Yet, as it happens with the passing of time, our language and customs are beginning to be slowly disappear. Generations have been born and their children learned some from their grandparents or learned a ltttle but that is forgotten.

Three years ago John Basor, who in the USA graduated from a college of foreign languages and Nevenka Novcich (cont'd next column)

Professor, born in the Zrenjanin area helped in organizing in the Watsonville High School, the teaching of our language. The principal approved and Nevenka started teaching in a night school children and adults who desired to learn. It was prven that there is a desire for the school and from then there has been an attendance of 20-25 students in each semester.

From that school was started another project and after many meetings and much more planning the YACO club was organized in February, 1979. Anyone who desires can become a member regardless of Nationality or association. The basic aim of this club is that people associated learn, improve and perfect our language and acquaint themselves with our language, culture and customs of the old country. Meetings are held every month with friendly conversation and often with programs and the showing of slides and pictures along with other Yugoslav presentations, etc.

And so what was started by 15 people is now a club of 250 members. That membership constantly grows. Every month there are 10 or 15 new members. Now the President is Andy Gulermovich, a young man whose parents were from in the USA and his grandfather (cont'd next page) was from Obod. He learned our language well and was in Jugoslavia last year.

The club puts out its monthly newsletter which mainly writes club news and conveys Jugoslav news published in foreign languages and often is news about the Dubrovnik area, etc. The Editor is Patricia Solano born Gospodnetic whose parents were from Brac and Basor is the manager of the publicity. All this naturally is done voluntarily. John Basor 32, left his birthplace with connections with his friends and school mates and follows our news and literature and is attached by his patriotism. He was in Jugoslavia this whole summer and traveled throughout Jugoslavia but mostly and understandably, stayed mostly in the Dubrovnik area and his birthplace Konavle. From 1970 this was his fourth 'visit to the old country. He would come more often but traveling is not cheap and this year also a group of friends gathered in Dunave with lambs turning and songs being sung.

When he was leaving, he carried many books about Dubrovnik; of the Dubrovnik summer plays and others. There will be something said about this at the meeting of the club membership, the club through which is carried the spirit and customs of the native home land.

PONOVO POD SVOJIM JAVOROM

Sedamdeset i četiri godine Jakov Novcic bio je daleko od rodnog kraja-Žrvnja, Jercegovine, Jugoslavije. Otišao je u Ameriku, brodom, 1906 - teške i daleke godine, kako sam reče. Dvadeset tri dana puta u nepoznato. "Morao sam nekud. U najmu kod Trstenog bilo je isuviše tesko. Bio sam izrabljivan.

Tamo je brzo nasao posao. Tezi, pa laksi, svejedno, morealo se raditi. Samo raditi! "Bilo je - priča Jakov - još naših ljudi tamo. Meki su se brzo vrati li, neki su tamo zauvijek ostali. Ja sam obikao tamo. Ali nista odavde ni (cont'd next column) sam zaboravio. Uvijek sam svoje za sve pitao. Ja i sada znam za svaku krušku sa koje sam brao kruške. Toliko sam želio da sretnem neke poznate ljude i teško mi je što ih više nema. Zurio sam da što prije stignem pod stari javor koga sam se uvijek sjećao. Vidi kako je visok! Na njemu sam se ljuljao. Tu sam prve korake naučio. Pod njim su moji janjci hladovali. Imao sam tada po dvije ruke i noge. Vidis, danas samo po jednu. Pa kad sam pod mojim javorom, čini mi se da iman sve."

Za ovoliko godina, Amerika je Jakov postala druga domovina. Ali svoj kraj nikada nicim nije zaboravio. "Hočeš da čuješ pjesmu?" Slušamo tihi bariton jednog devedesettrogodisnjaka. "Djevojka je momku prsten povračala. Naj ti momce prsten moji te ne zele..." Koliko radosti sto to nije zaboravio, koliko tuge u starackim, ali još bistrim očima što mu nema poznatih lica. "Divna je ovo zemlja! Kako ste samo uspjeli od onako siromašne zemlje mapraviti sve ovo? I to za posljednjih trideset godina! Ja za svoje divljenje Do you know that we have an english memam riječi. Toliko mi je drago što sam pod svoje stare dane sve ovo vidio. Divno! Samo me ljuti, strasno me čudi što je Popovo polje ovako pusto. Volio bih da ga vidim zelenog. ... Moja je mladost bila kratka. Pozdravljamo se. Ruka jos jaka, jos muska, ali vec blijeda. Jedna ruka. Priča za sebe. Njom je mahao svom starom javoru, želeci pod njim novo hladovanje. Uz suzu u zelenom, jos bistrom oku.

Srečno, Jakove Novčiću! I dodji dogodine! Popovo polje biće zeleno. Davaće dva ureda za jedno ljeto. I moći će da hrani Hercegovinu. I više od toga...

Watson left behind a town, colorful stories

John Howard Watson, one of Santa Cruz County's most colorful characters, stayed only long enough to get a town named for him and to provide a few stories for the knee-slappers to relate around the potbellied stove on a cold winter day.

It's a pity because as historian E.S. Harrison said, "If one-half the stories about him are true he was one of the most interesting characters in Santa Cruz County — indeed wherever he lived."

Harrison, author of an 1892 history of Santa Cruz, says Watson was born in Georgia about 1810 and went to West Point, but didn't graduate.

"He returned to Georgia, read law, killed a man and went to Texas." There, he married. During the gold fever in 1849 he came to California, bringing a slave, Jim Williams, who lived many years in Santa Clara. Williams was freed by Watson as they crossed the Colorado River into the free state of California and he died in Santa Clara in 1913 at the age of 96.

Watson represented San Francisco in the first legislature when it convened in San Jose, resigning two months later on Feb. 18.: 1850, the day the 27 original California counties (including Santa Clara and Santa Cruz) were created.

He practiced law in Santa Cruz and in one case was appointed by the court to defend a thief. The judge advised Watson to take the defendant into private chambers before the hearing and to advise him "what you consider the best course for him to pursue."

A few minutes later when the bailiff went to summon Watson and his client, only Watson was in the room. Watson reportedly told the court later that after hearing his client's story he advised him "the best course for him to pursue" was out the window and northeast up the canyon.

Watson was appointed the first judge of the 3rd Judicial District, which included Contra Costa, Santa Clara, Santa Cruz and Monterey counties, serving from 1850 to 1851. He resigned in 1851, according to the late Santa Cruz historian Leon Rowland, because he figured lawyers made more money than judges. (He lost his first case and his client was hanged as a horse thief.)

A Democrat, Watson represented Santa Cruz and Monterey counties in the state Senate in 1860 and 1861.

The town of Watsonville was laid out in 1852 by Watson and D.S. Gregory. It was plotted on Rancho Bolsa de Pajaro, granted to Sebastian Rodriguez in 1837 and confirmed to him by the courts in 1860. In 1852 the land was described in legal papers as "Watsonville."

Historian Harrison said Watson was 5-foot-10, broad and heavy with short black curly hair. He stood erect and was suave in manner, but negligent in his attire. He was also "improvident, reckless and impulsive . . . more frequently without money than with it, and appreciated its value so little that he never made an effort to collect a debt or pay one."

No one in need was ever known to be turned down by Watson, who would "share his last dollar with anyone" — even if he had to borrow the money, which he probably forgot to pay back. He even borrowed from his former slave, until Williams rebelled.

Eugene Sawyer, writing the 1922 History of Santa Clara County, tells of a conversation between San Jose attorney R.F. Peckham and Watson. The latter admitted he knew very little law and Peckham asked him how he managed to get along so well with his cases.

"I make two presumptions," the judge said.
"When I have heard the evidence I first presume what the law ought to be to do justice between parties, and after I have settled that presumption I next presume that the law is what it ought to be, and give judgment accordingly."

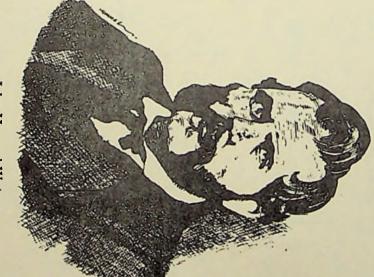

Watson went to Nevada in the excitement over the Comstock gold discovery and never returned to Watsonville.

F.W. Atkinson in his "100 Years in the Pajaro Valley" says that Watson was one of Nevada's outstanding lawyers, and that he started copper mines east of Elko but did not live to develop them.

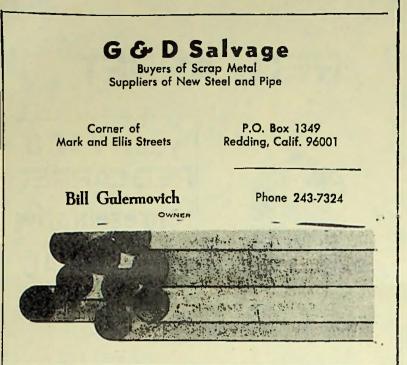

a friend of Benjamin Hill, a Georgia political leader who opposed secession and who later served as a U.S. representative and senator.

It is believed Watson is buried in the Elko City Cemetery.

Harrison, writing 10 years after the judge's death, said he "died among the 'sagebrush people' without enough money to bury him," but no hint of poverty appears in the obituary, which notes the services were well attended by the judge's many friends.

HOW THE PEASANTS BOUGHT WISDOM

THE peasants in a certain little village by the sea found life rather hard, and tried to discover why it should be so. The head of the village and the elder men sat talking about it one day, and one of them said: "The reason for this state of things must be in our lack of wise men. Look, in all the other villages there is at least one wise man among the peasants, but we haven't a single one." THEY all agreed that this might be the reason for their wretchedness, and started thinking what to do about it. At last the man who was considered to have the best brains among them spoke: "I think I know what we should do, brothers. Let's collect fifty ducats among us, and send three of our men to Venice to buy wisdom; for I've always heard that Venetians are the wisest people in the world and that they so brim over with wisdom that they have a surplus to sell to other people. Of course, this rare commodity will be very dear." (cont'd next column)

ALL the peasants thought this a very good plan and acted accordingly; and withing three days the golden ducats were collected and three men dispatched to Venice to bring wisdom to their little village.

THE three arrived in Venice safely, and started at once to look for wisdom and to inquire about its price. They soon came across a cunning man who thought this too good a chance to be missed.

"I can't sell you a stone of wisdom for the amount of money you've brought," he said, "but I'll let you have a quarter."

THE peasants agreed to the bargain, happy to have found the right man so soon. The Venetian, however, caught a mouse, shut it in a little box, wrapped the box tightly, and said to his customers: "Here is wisdom for you. You'd better hurry home with it, but This Folk-Tale is from YUGOSLAV FOLK-TALESdon't open the box before you reach your village."

> THE happy villagers returned on board their boat and started on their way home. As they drew near, one of them said: "Listen, brothers; I don't think it right to share this wisdom in equal parts with the whole village. We've taken more trouble over it than all the (cont'd next page) others together, and I believe we're entitled to have one half of it among the three of us. Let the village have the other half."

HIS two friends nodded approvingly, and he took the box and unwrapped it. The moment he opened it the mouse escaped - as any mouse would do. It hid somewhere in the hull, and the three peasants were left to moan and lament the loss of their dearly purchased wisdom. However, when their hunt proved unsuccessful and when their lamenting came to an end, one of them was struck by a bright idea.

"LISTEN, brothers! There's really nothing to worry about, for our wisdom is still on board this ship- it hasn't run away."

SOON afterwards they reached their own shore. The whole village was at the little harbor to welcome them, waving bright handkerchiefs and cheering. But when the elder peasants wanted to look at wisdom, the three men confessed, though somewhat reluctantly, to having let it go loose. Their friends on the shore were grieved for a while, but, as they all agreed that wisdom must still be hiding in the boat they decided to pull the boat ashore and to keep watch over it day and night

So every day from that time on a man. would stand sentinel by the boat; and the peasants, whenever there was a serious matter to be solved, or a wise letter to be written, would come into the boat, sit there for a while to absorb as much wisdom as possible, and then do their task with confidence.

THE END

YACO has for some time now considered buying a typewriter for the Editor-Typist so that that particular duty of typing and editing could be made a bit less difficult as it must all be done during one weekend. With a typewriter of their own, YACO Editor-Typist could prepare this newsletter (Newspaper) during the month. At this time the KALIFORNSKI is being typed every two weeks. With the membership's approval (YACO cannot make a purchase over $500 without the membership's approval), this could be an important investment. We would greatly appreciate hearing from you on this (Especially the Editor. I've secured some figures on good typewriters, especially IBM which is a superb investment.) LET US HEAR FROM YOU!!!!!

SELJAN BROTHERS

Brothers Mirko and Stevo Seljan

It has since been shown that one of the reasons for the Seljans' journey to South America was to help Yugoslav settlers there by their exploratory and research work — showing them ways and means of earning their livelihood in particular areas. By their example, lectures and the entertainments they organized, the brothers fostered the national spirit of Yugoslav settlers and helped them keep in touch with their native land.

On their arrival in Brazil in 1903, they founded a company named Mision cientifica Croata Mirko y Stevo Seljan. which was to undertake numerous largescale projects in conjunction with several South American states and large business concerns. The Brazilian government entrusted them with the task of exploring the possibilities of utilizing waterways for an east-west communications network that would induce people to move from the more densely populated Atlantic coastal region to the distant empty spaces around the River Parana and further on to the the Mato Grosso. Besides this task, they used their extensive travels to investigate climatic conditions and economic possibilities for settlers, the flora, fauna and mineral resources. While studying the life and culture of the native Indians, they collected ethnographic material which they sent to their homeland.

Their journey through Brazil and Paraguay took nearly a year and a half, from May 1903 to the end of October 1904.

At Asunción they made preparations for an expedition to the Salto del Guayra Falls on the River Parana with the help of the Paraguayan and Argentinian governments. The book El Salto del Guayra by Mirko and Stevo Seljan, published in Buenos Aires in 1905, records this expedition through the heart of Paraguay which lasted one hundred days. The title page of the Argentinian edition states that the manuscript was translated from the Croatian original into Spanish by a certain Serafin Livacić, and from Spanish into French by Charles de la Hitte. The Spanish edition is illustrated by photographs taken by the Seljans themselves, and has an appendix showing their route on four geographical drawings by Mirko. The publication of this work was financed by Nikola Mihanović, a Croat who was Austro-Hungarian consul-general in Argentina.

In 1906, they made careful preparations for another expedition, this time into the Brazilian state of Mato Grosso. Letters and other written records show, however, that this undertaking was frustrated by the outbreak of a revolution in Mato Grosso coinciding with the start of the expedition. Since this caused considerable financial losses, Mirko Seljan, as the expedition's leader, sued the Brazilian government with the support of the Austro-Hungarian consulate and Chilean government, the equipping of the expedition having been partially financed by a Chilean-Croatian consortium and no small sum of money invested. In support of this suit, Mirko published documents connected with the case in a Buenos Aires scientific magazine. This text later issued separately under the title: El Gobierno de los Estados Unidos de Brasil y la Mision científica Croata. The legal proceeding dragged on for several years until the Seljans and the Croatian Scientific Mission finally lost their suit.

From 1907 to 1911, the brothers promoted intensive educational and cultural activities among the Croatian and other Slav settlers in South America. They continued their geographical explorations and ethnographic studies, recording their findings in a diary and afterwards writing articles on the Amerindians which were published in their homeland and other countries. Apart from enriching the Croatian National Museum, they also supplied exhibits for the Geological and Zoological Museum in Zagreb.

In the spring of 1911, together with a number of settlers, the Seljans founded the Croatian Stock Company, with its head office in Lima (Peru), in which several very wealthy persons had a financial interest. Through this company they obtained a contract with the Peruvian government to build a road linking the Peruvian highlands with the Amazonian lowlands in the eastern part of the country. After the signing of this contract, the Seljans set off for the United States to negotiate with some American industrialists interested in putting money into the project. These American partners undertook to finance and equip the initial exploratory expedition. While staying in the USA (from November 1911 to July 1912), the Seljans visited many Croat and other Slav settlements, lectured on their explorations and gave concerts, all of which attracted many Slav immigrants in that part of the New World. Their public appearances were reported in almost all the Slav newspapers published in the USA at that time.

Back in Peru, they began preparing for their departure into the interior. Early in September 1912, the brothers parted in the port of Callao (the sea outlet of Lima). Stevo was bound for Chicago, where he had further business matters to discuss, and Mirko for Lima. This was the last time they saw each other. In a letter sent to his family in Karlovac, Stevo later wrote: "And so we parted in the port of Callao. I set off for civilization in the United States, and Mirko, in the service of civilization, and the progress of mankind, for the unknown jungle."

The expedition team divided into two groups, one led by Mirko, accompanied by an American representative, Patrick O'Higgins, and the other by a Peruvian engineer, Lezcano, who had a knowledge of Indian languages. An American engineer named O'Donnel was a member of the latter group. It was arranged that the two groups would meet up at Pachiza in December 1912. but Lezcano's party never arrived. Selian's group then set off alone, in bad weather, along the River Huaybamba, a left-bank tributary of the Hualaga. making for Payatenu, the last outpost of civilization in the region. Advancing slowly in appalling weather conditions. they forced their way through almost impenetrable jungle in a northwesterly direction. In March 1913 they reached the Indian village of Vingo Jellache, from where Mirko wrote letters to his mother in Karlovac and his brother in Chicago dated March 30. This was the last that was heard of Mirko Seljan and the rest of his group. Lezcano's party likewise vanished without a trace. By the second half of 1913 the papers began publishing news, often contradictory, about the fate of the expedition members.

At the end of the following year, a Peruvian government expedition, headed by Stevo Seljan, set out in search. At Jellache they came upon two Indians who had accompanied Mirko, and these led the way along the tracks made by the vanished party, which were now scarcely visible after the lapse of almost one year. Finally, they came upon a pile of bones. By the platinum tooth fillings, Stevo recognized his brother's skull. The remains were given decent burial and a large wooden cross raised over the grave.

Mirko's death put an and to a brotherly relationship of remarkable closeness and deep affection. Stevo continued their joint work since the profession of explorer was the only one he knew. Travelling through North and South America, he mainly engaged in mineral prospecting. While searching for manganese, he visited the Brazilian state of Minas Gerais in 1917, and settie down there near the town of Ouro Preto. It was here that he met and married a Brazilian schoolteacher, Maria Aracy, who bore him two daughters. Zora and Muema, and two sons, Mirko and Janko. He died of cancer in 1936, but his family is still living in Brazil.

Transatlantic Services

During the winter season JAT (YUGOSLAV AIRLINES) will continue to fly to Yugoslvaia four times weekly from Pan Am Terminal in New york. The days are: Monday, Tuesday, Friday and Saturday. The departure time has changed a little.

Winter flight schedule starts on November 1, 1980.

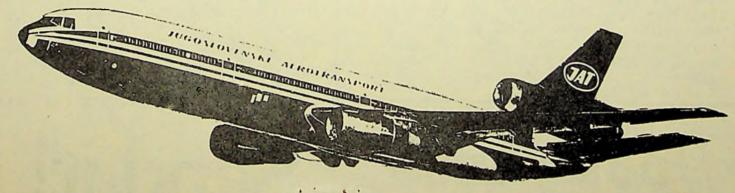

In addition to New York, this winter for the first time, JAT will have flights regularly from Chicago to Belgrade via Zagreb every Tuesday.

Our domestic flights to the big cities in Yugoslavia are arranged so that they have a good connection with Transatlantic flights from New York and Chicago.

JAT believes that its winter schedule will be an excellent opportunity for arrival of your relatives and friends from the Old Country.

Because of the energy fuel crisis, JAT had to raise their prices even though JAT regrets doing that, and for more than a year JAT did NOT increase their prices, we have still tried to be the most economical as opposed to the other companies.

You can make reservations with your travel agent or directly through our JAT offices in Los Angeles. Our telephone numbers are: (213) 388-0379 or 388-0370.

Our YACO Scholarship Fund is still going strong and any donations you would care to make to such a worthy cause would be most appreciated not only by the deserving students receiving them, but also by YACO itself. These donations are tax decuctible as YACO is a Corporation.

What better way to contribute to our community and to our youth than by giving to this Scholarship Fund. Rembember, June is the month that we'll be selecting the deserving students to receive the awards so make our Scholarship Fund one to be proud of. No other Yugoslav organization in Watsonville has awarded scholarships to our local youth and now YACO, being the first wishes to make this a BIG event. We hope you will join us in this endeavor. Send contributions to SCHOLARSHIP, P. O. BOX 226, Watsonville, CA 95077.

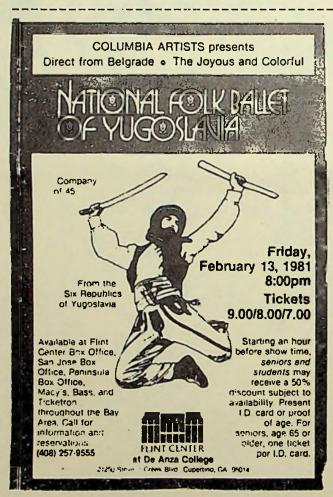

Have you heard about the GREAT book that PETER J. DIVIZICH wrote entitled "MEMOIRS OF PETER J. DIVIZICH" The King of the Grapes? While in Yugoslavia, Babe (Brautovich) Hill's cousins showed the book to us and told us of the man called Peter J. What a story!! In this Divizich. book Watsonville is mentioned many times along with many of our Watsonvillians who were involved in shaping the future of Watsonville. There are also some lovely and interesting pictures of these people and the surrounding areas of agriculture and its early beginnings.

If you would be interested in reading some good material you may write to inquire about purchase to: EDWARDS STUDIO, 248 North Main Street, Porterville, CA 93257 or call to (209) 781-1225.

An Opportunity

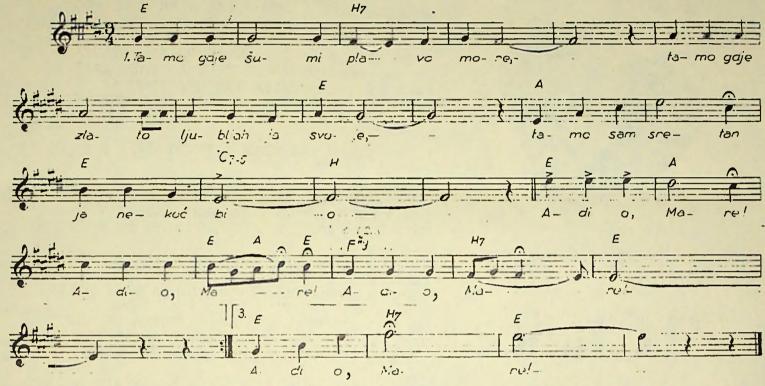

Well, this may sound a bit premature but did you realize that in May we will be holding elections again? I realize this may be a little early but I might suggest that if any of you out there would like to hold a position in YACO, you most certainly would be welcome. We will survive and grow with new people being involved and bringing in new ideas to our membership. I have said in the past that no one person or group should monopolize an organization and so you should be thinking about running for election of a position. Nothing is too hard in YACO. We are always near to assist anyone. We are not formal at our meetings (Just ask any member), and no one has to go it alone while sitting in an office. YACO being your organization needs to be shared by you not only in fun but also in labor. (oont'd next page)
